Oregon Health Insurance Mandates
In Oregon, as in other states, the law requires that most group and individual health insurance include coverage for certain illnesses or conditions, that care by certain providers be reimbursed by insurance, and certain populations—such as newborns—be covered. These requirements are called “health insurance mandates.” Mandates also may deal with other areas such as requiring coverage for continuation and insurance portability, coverage regardless of pre-existing conditions, and requirements that health insurance carriers undertake certain duties such as utilization review. Mandates in the first two areas above—condition/illness covered and providers eligible for reimbursement—tend to be the type that receive the most attention from lawmakers, the public, insurance carriers, employers, and health care providers because these areas comprise the largest segment of mandates and impact the costs of health insurance coverage.

The Insurance Division, as part of the Department of Consumer and Business Services, is the state agency responsible for consumer protection and regulation of the 1,500 insurance companies doing business in Oregon. The Division investigates and resolves complaints against insurance companies and agents; investigates violations of Oregon insurance law and takes appropriate enforcement actions when necessary; monitors companies selling insurance to ensure they are financially sound; reviews policies to ensure they comply with state law; and, monitors policy issues such as health insurance mandates.

The Insurance Division has identified 24 condition/illness and provider mandates currently in Oregon law. Attached is a chart of Oregon’s mandates for diseases/conditions and provider reimbursement, last updated February 2004, including statutory information and types of insurance subject to the law.
Types of Mandates
Most of Oregon’s mandates require either that the specified condition, illness or service be covered to the same extent as other benefits, or that the services by the specified provider be covered to the same extent as services provided by a physician. However, there are two exceptions to this policy that apply to Oregon’s health-related benefits:

Minimum mandated benefits – Coverage for certain services may be mandated, but are less equal in coverage to other benefits. This may include different limits, co-payments, and deductibles. In Oregon, mental health and chemical dependency treatment benefits have lower amounts of required coverage than for physical illnesses.

Mandatory offering – Requires that insurers offer the option of a policy with certain coverage, and that the optional coverage can be accepted by the insured, usually with an additional or higher premium. Oregon requires a mandatory offering of alcoholism treatment in individual policies, but allows the insurance company to charge a different premium for this benefit if chosen.

Costs and Benefits of Mandates
There is debate around the issues of health insurance mandates. Proponents contend that mandates are necessary to ensure that insured individuals have adequate access to a broad spectrum of health care, and people do not have to turn to public-sector health care because they cannot receive treatment through private insurance. Opponents note that excessive mandates add to the costs of health insurance and result in employers dropping employee health insurance, spending more for coverage and/or passing costs on to their employees, leading to more uninsured in the state as companies and workers can no longer afford basic insurance.

Proposing New Mandates
ORS 171.875 requires that every proposed legislative measure containing health insurance coverage mandates be accompanied by a report that assesses both the social and financial effects of the coverage. Areas that must be addressed in this report include:

- Extent that treatment or service will be used in Oregon
- Extent of coverage already available in Oregon
- Proportion of Oregonians already having such coverage
- Extent that lack of coverage results in financial hardship in Oregon
- Evidence of medical need in Oregon for the proposed treatment or services
- Financial effect of the proposed measure including increase/decrease of costs of treatment, extent that coverage will increase treatment, extent that mandated treatment is expected to be a substitute for more expensive treatment, impact on administrative expenses of insurer and premiums/administrative expenses of policyholders, and overall impact on total cost of health care
Automatic Repeal of Mandates

In 1985, legislation was enacted that automatically repeals health insurance mandates effective on or after July 13, 1985, which do not specify a repeal date (see ORS 743.700). This “automatic repealer” abolishes such statutes on the sixth anniversary of that law’s effective date.

The law applies to individual or group health insurance mandates that do any of the following:

- Requires coverage of specific physical or mental health conditions or specific hospital, medical, surgical or dental services
- Requires coverage for specific people
- Requires carriers to reimburse specific providers
- Requires insurers to provide coverage on a nondiscriminatory basis
- Forbids insurers from excluding covered services from payment or reimbursement
- Forbids excluding people due to their medical history

In 2002, the Insurance Division received an Attorney General’s (AG) opinion regarding two mandates that were revised in 1999. The AG opined that, as a general rule, subsequent amendments to a health insurance mandate do not modify the automatic repeal date of a mandate.

However, the AG stated that the exception to the rule is when “substantial or material changes” are amended into current law on health insurance mandates, and that the six-year automatic repealer (unless noted otherwise in the amended bill) starts from the effective date of the newly amended law.

Mandates in Other States

Blue Cross and Blue Shield (BCBS) regularly conducts a survey of states regarding the overall number of health insurance mandates in statute.¹
