Oregonians urged to make their voice heard at redistricting hearings

Community voices critical in drawing of electoral maps

This week, the Oregon Legislature’s Redistricting Committees will begin their first virtual “road show” sessions, where they hear public testimony from community members about their goals and priorities for redrawing Oregon’s legislative and congressional districts.

The hearings, part of the once-every-decade redistricting process, are scheduled for each of the state’s five Congressional Districts beginning this week, with additional hearings for each of the districts in the coming weeks.

You can find instructions on how to testify by video, phone, or written testimony at the Legislature’s Redistricting webpage: <https://www.oregonlegislature.gov/redistricting>

Input from the public is critical to the redistricting process, which determines how the boundaries are drawn for Oregon’s legislative and congressional districts.
